Chicago Charity Challenge: reinventing corporate giving

By Stacey Rago, executive director, Chicago Charity Challenge

People want to work for and do business with companies that give to charities, whether in volunteer hours or financial contributions. As a result, corporations are increasingly seeking ways to show a tangible impact of their giving by going beyond the "one-and-done" form of charity events held within their business. Last year, 23 Chicago-area firms found a fun, engaging and motivating solution to keeping employees focused on their favorite cause or charity, while making a significant contribution to the communities they serve.

Last year, more than 4,500 employees from 23 businesses competed in the Chicago Charity Challenge, a unique corporate giving contest designed to motivate participants to fundraise and volunteer. Affectionately dubbed "the Cha Cha," the Chicago Charity Challenge is the only corporate giving initiative that harnesses the competitive spirit to maximize employee engagement. The challenge serves companies interested in developing more meaningful and ongoing relationships with their select charities.

Corporate employees who joined the 2015 competition logged over 46,000 volunteer hours and raised more than $14 million for Chicago-area charities. Read more.

Revamped Relay for Life

By Bruce Barton, staff writer, Los Altos Town Crier

The annual Los Altos Relay For Life fundraiser for the American Cancer Society started with a bang in 2004, with hundreds participating and hundreds of thousands of dollars raised.

But the 24-hour event lost steam after a few years as participants and organizers grew weary of the massive effort and time commitment required. Organizers realized that major changes were needed to keep the event afloat.

Enter Relay 2.0, a revamped event scheduled June 12 at Hillview Park that completely changes the format while keeping the Relay's overall purpose intact. Instead of a 24-hour marathon, this year's affair runs 4-9 p.m. Instead of multiple laps, 2.0 will feature a single 2.5-mile lap along streets surrounding the park. Other new elements include a flamingo decoration contest, picnic site judging and a relay, with runners passing a torch. The luminaria - candle-filled bags with memorial messages lining the track - have been replaced by "messages of hope," in which participants can attach artwork and notes to a decorated chain-link fence. The risks — and rewards — of reinventing signature events

By Susan J. Ragusa, contributing columnist, Inside Philanthropy

There's a great Bette Davis quote that goes something like, "Old age ain't no place for sissies." It puts me in mind of the recently departed month and the image of decrepit Father Time ambling out of the year. Certainly for nonprofits that depend on a year-end fundraising blitz, December has never been for the faint of heart. Nor, for that matter, is January, when the donation tally is complete.

That high-stakes setting informs the success story I have to share. Last year, I was part of a daring December initiative. A nonprofit organization of which I'm a board member, Astor Services for Children and Families, took a popular free event and, for the first time, required a contribution to attend. That's practically the definition of risk-taking for nonprofits. Yet, the outcome was an event that generated positive buzz and raised a significant amount of money — in fact, more than other signature events in recent years. How it was accomplished may be of value to others — at any time of the year. Read more.

A new approach to finding a business partner

By Paul Ashley, managing director, FirstPerson

The request for proposal, or RFP, is important and for some industries a requirement.

When done thoughtfully, this selection process can be a great experience that leads to meaningful partnerships that endure. It can be an effective question set to learn more about a company; however, it often stops at just that.

I've been on the winning and losing side of this process, and as I reflect on how great partnerships are built, even the ones when FirstPerson was not chosen, I see an important theme emerging. When you treat the RFP process like the process you use when hiring talent, great outcomes happen. Read more. has become an important tool to bridge funding gaps for nonprofits with limited financial resources. A variety of online platforms exist that offer multiple tools to raise money for a specific project.

gifts is wrong. Conventional wisdom can lead us astray when devising effective fundraising strategies. Mythical truisms can mislead us into thinking we should be chasing pots of gold that remain out of reach.

Work-life balance is easier when your manager knows how to assess performance. The best thing to support working parents and all employees is to get better at a poorly executed function of managers: performance appraisals.
