Parkinson's patients fight back

By Lynn Sygiel, editor, Charitable Advisors

Six years ago Joyce Johnson was hired by Rock Steady Boxing's board and charged with the task of figuring out a way to expand its program.

"We were getting calls from all over the world where people would hear about it, and they would call and say, 'Where's Rock Steady Boxing in Colorado Springs?' And I would have to say, 'I'm sorry, there's only one Rock Steady Boxing, and it's here in Indianapolis,'" said Johnson.

There was no long-range plan in place in 2006 when Scott Newman -- at the time Marion County's prosecutor and public safety director - started boxing. Newman had been diagnosed with early onset Parkinson's disease, and his friend, Vince Perez, an attorney and former boxer, wanted to help. His intention was just to keep Newman active. Rock Steady Boxing

- Rock Steady Boxing was founded in Indianapolis in 2006.
- Forced, intense exercise has been scientifically proven to reduce, delay and even reverse, some of the symptoms of Parkinson's disease.
- At its flagship Indianapolis location, 19 classes are offered each week, serving more than 200 people.
- Sixteen "Training Camps" are presented each year to replicate and establish Rock Steady affiliate programs throughout the world.
- As of April 2016, there were 356 affiliates in 46 states, and 20 affiliates in seven countries.

By Patrick M. Rooney, associate dean, Indiana University Lilly Family School of Philanthropy

With the myriad demands nonprofit professionals face for their time and attention, it can be tough to make professional growth and career advancement a priority. Here are some steps you can weave into your schedule that will help you in your current position and prepare you for your next opportunity where you are now or elsewhere.

- Become an issue expert and share what you know. Research and educate yourself on a key topic, and then develop original podcasts, blog posts, and opinion articles. "Blogging makes you a go-to person," Joe Waters, a cause marketing speaker and coach, wrote in an article for HubSpot, noting that becoming an expert lets you become "the person in your organization that people seek out to understand an issue." Waters says that the experience "prepares you for your next big thing," whether that's being noticed by recruiters, writing a book, starting your own nonprofit or becoming a consultant.
