Groundwork Indy: Developing a neighborhood and youth

By Lynn Sygiel, editor, Charitable Advisors

Most teenagers don't sit around talking about invasive plants and medicinal herbs or brownfields. But at least a half dozen area teenagers are the exception. Isaac, 15, Adarin, 16, Nashawn, 16, Randie, 16, Aliza, 15, and De'Shawn, 19, spend Saturday mornings researching and learning more about these topics, while also getting their hands dirty.

Adarin

Aliza

De'Shawn

Nashawn

Randie

These six teens are members of Groundwork Indy's Green Team, and spend not only their Saturdays during the school year, but summers too, learning how to best help the Northwest Area neighborhood. Not all live in the neighborhood now, but several were born there. The area is bounded roughly by 16th Street on the south, 38th Street on the north, Martin Luther King Street on the east and Kessler Boulevard North Drive on the west.

Their work stems from an extensive community assessment. First, there was a feasibility study by a steering committee to determine if Indianapolis was a right place for a Groundwork program, and at the same time a Northwest Area Quality of Life plan was being developed. With 40 percent of the homes vacant, 584 of the 3,840 acres dedicated to green space lacking attention, and multiple identified brownfields, there is plenty of work to go around. Read more.

Groundwork Indy's roots

By Lynn Sygiel, editor, Charitable Advisors

In the 1980s, Liverpool, England started an experiment. Working with young people, the program improved areas that had been neglected. After success, Groundwork UK was established by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher to promote local partnerships that could rebuild Britain's bypassed urban communities through community-led strategies.

It's success lead the U.S. National Park Service staff to travel to the U.K. to learn more. Impressed, the National Park Service launched the Groundwork USA in 1996, recognizing its potential to build upon the human and environmental assets found in every community. Read more.

Northwest Area: Progress and redevelopment plan

The Northwest Area (NWA) is a culturally rich but economically distressed coalition of neighborhoods located 2 miles northwest of Indianapolis' vibrant Downtown.

This plan, created through the U.S. EPA Brownfield Program's Area Wide Planning process, emerged as a vehicle to tap the opportunity, which exists among the many brownfield sites found in the NWA. Specifically, the former Carrier-Bryant site is a significant, near-term opportunity for brownfield redevelopment, primed to drive beneficial and transformative change in the Northwest Area. The City of Indianapolis and its partners, recognize the potential for this 19-acre site to catalyze the revitalization of the surrounding community. Read more.

Retention strategies: The challenge of low loyalty in millennials

By Steve Rossetti, director of training and development, Synergy

Mention the word "millennial" near any HR manager and certain connotations will immediately spring to mind. While there are workers in the millennial generation that exhibit tremendous loyalty, it seems that the mentality of changing jobs often is one that has become commonplace among the group.

In fact, two thirds of millennials expect to leave their current company in the next four years.

Despite this mindset, millennials are valuable and productive workers to hire. Once they are on board, the solution to low loyalty in millennials comes down to knowing what they want and adapting strategies to retain them. Millennials crave being employed for an organization that provides them with meaningful work and has a positive impact on the world. Read more.

Nonprofits boost social media presence to reach donors. Today 43 percent of millennials and 21 percent of baby boomers prefer to be contacted through social media, and about 95 percent of nonprofits worldwide have Facebook pages.

Is your board all the same? That's a problem. "Boards that lack diversity suffer from poorer organizational outcomes," writes Kara Alaimo. "After all, it's easier to fall prey to groupthink when you're part of a uniform group," she writes.

Evaluating staff performance

One of the greatest challenges many nonprofit leaders face is evaluating the performance of development office staff. This short video is designed to help address this challenge!
