Single leadership skill to thrive in change

By Sabina Nawaz, contributor, Forbes

IBM's global study of over 1,500 CEOs revealed that CEOs are acutely concerned with the pace of change in today's world and figuring out how to run organizations ill prepared to deal with that change. As a leader, you can't accurately predict the future, but you can increase the capacity of your organization to deal with an uncertain one. To do that, you'll need to hone one skill to near super-power levels: coaching.

Whether you call it coaching or not, you're probably used to helping the people under you to skill up. By intentionally applying good coaching techniques to your work with others, you can succeed in decreasing their reliance on you. With the right approach, you can coach employees to become more resilient, stay grounded in ambiguity and learn through failure. That way, together, you can do more than just weather uncertainty; you can succeed and thrive through it. Read more.

Heifetz speaks extensively and advises heads of governments, businesses, and nonprofit organizations throughout the world and co-developed the adaptive leadership framework.

The outlook for giving

By Una Osili, director of research, Lilly Family School of Philanthropy

Looking for some good news to start off the year? Nonprofit organizations and the people they serve can find encouragement in the anticipated charitable-giving climate.

Giving in the U.S. will grow by 3.6 percent in 2017 and by an additional 3.8 percent in 2018, according to The Philanthropy Outlook 2017 & 2018 produced by Indiana University Lilly Family School of Philanthropy researchers and presented by Marts & Lundy, a leading fundraising and philanthropy consulting firm. The Outlook generates projections for year-to-year growth rates in overall giving; giving by type of donor; and giving to education, health, and public-society benefit nonprofits.

All types of donors are expected to increase giving in both years:

- Growth in giving by foundations will lead the way (5.9 percent in 2017 and 6.0 percent in 2018).
- Estate giving is expected to increase by 5.4 percent this year and 5.2 percent next year.
- Giving by individuals is predicted to grow 3.0 percent and 3.2 percent respectively.
- Giving by corporations will lag behind the other sources of giving, rising by just 2.4 percent and 2.7 percent respectively.
