Bright spots of community engagement

By Christopher Hoene, Christopher Kingsley and Matthew Leighninger

Communities across our nation are experimenting with new ways to engage citizens in the decisions made by civic leaders from the public, private and nonprofit sectors, working sometimes together and sometimes at cross purposes. Ultimately, success at making democracy work and sustaining healthy communities requires engaged individuals, organizations, and institutions. Across our country, community engagement bright spots are emerging. These initiatives foster a sense of attachment, expand access to information and resources, and create opportunities for citizens to play more active roles in setting priorities, addressing issues, and planning the longer-term sustainability of their communities.

The National League of Cities, working with the John S. and James L Knight Foundation, selected 14 communities that the two institutions are engaged with to explore how well or poorly some of these experiments are faring today.

This analysis then focused more closely on four communities -- Detroit, Philadelphia, Chicago, and Austin -- to document the lessons learned and the challenges ahead. Read more.

Carnegie Foundation community engagement higher education classification

The Carnegie Foundation's Classification for Community Engagement is an elective classification, meaning that it is based on voluntary participation by institutions. The elective classification involves data collection and documentation of important aspects of institutional mission, identity and commitments, and requires substantial effort invested by participating institutions. It is an institutional classification; it is not for systems of multiple campuses or for part of an individual campus.

The classification is not an award. It is an evidence-based documentation of institutional practice to be used in a process of self-assessment and quality improvement. The documentation is reviewed to determine whether the institution qualifies for recognition as a community engaged institution.

The Community Engagement Classification takes place on a five-year cycle. The next opportunity for institutions to apply for classification will be during the 2020 cycle (which will open in 2018).

In addition to the Elective Community Engagement Classification, the Carnegie Foundation also provides its all-inclusive classifications based on secondary analysis of existing national data. Information on the all-inclusive classifications can be found here.

Public health community engagement

By Minnesota Department of Health

Engaging community members in problem-solving solutions to issues that affect them is one of the fundamental principles of public health. The most effective way to achieve public health goals, especially the elimination of disparities in health status, is to actively engage those experiencing the problems in every aspect of addressing them.

Community engagement means involving community members in all activities -- from identifying the relevant issues and making decisions about how to address them, to evaluating and sharing the results with the community. Minnesota's Department of Health provides background, tips and tools for effective community engagement. Read more.

Discover another way to manage time using seven steps

By Stefanie Krievins, coach and founder, The Heart Projects

One of the great equalizers among humans is that weekly we all have a total of 168 hours. From the CEO to the receptionist to the HR director to the development director to the case manager, it's the same number.

As 2016 approaches its end, each of us has a choice as to how to spend those hours and how to meet end-of-year goals. We can either

1. Create a productive focus by actively managing time, calendar, work priorities and interactions with colleagues; or
2. Allow being overwhelmed and bad stress to overtake mood and communication style, leaving us with a tendency to try to multi-task and take on too much work.

Admittedly, most of us are somewhere in between. There is a way to have more of the first option, however, and that means learning the seven disciplines of productivity. Read more.
