YouthBuild Indy offers hands-on education

By Lynn Sygiel, editor, Charitable Advisors

The refrain is a familiar one, and young people hear it all the time: "Study hard, go to college, get a good job." For many students, it's great advice. In a competitive marketplace, a good education is vital.

Rodney Bussell, program director at YouthBuild Indy, is all for studying hard and getting a good job. But going to college? Bussell says it's not for everyone.

"Somehow, somewhere, you need to get certified in something," said Bussell, who has a background in youth work and has been in charge of YouthBuild Indy since 2015. "If you're better at using your hands, let's get you in an apprenticeship program. If you're not that classroom person who will sit in the class for the next four or five years all day long and write papers, if that's not you, it's OK. It's not a bad thing."

At YouthBuild Indy, a nonprofit on the city's Eastside near 25th Street and Keystone Avenue, low-income young people receive construction and trades training while working to earn a High School Equivalency Diploma. The program began in Harlem in New York City in 1978, and a decade later, its founder took it national. Read more.

Students embrace opportunity to move forward

Students embrace opportunity to move forward

Britany Cooper dropped out of school at 18, and learned about YouthBuild from her cousin. He heard about the program to finish high school from his mom who picked up a flier. Inspired, Cooper called the same day to get into the program.

While the majority of students in this program are definitely male, this mom with a 7-year-old has about a month before she reaches her goal to be a carpenter and make a better life for herself and her daughter.

I went to Broad Ripple, and then I dropped out 'cause I had a kid. I was 18 when I had my child.

Since then I've been working off and on. I wasn't doing nothing, and I was like, 'I got to do something 'cause my child cannot see me doing nothing.'

And so I was like, 'This is an opportunity for me to change my life,' so I took that step. Thank God that I'm here and I'm just trying to do something that I've been wanting for all my life. I'm changing my life around. I teach my daughter the way to success is to take the opportunity. Read more.

Pitfall season for cause marketing

By: Zachary S. Kester, J.D., LL.M, CFRM and Laura Fucio, Charitable Allies

After a hot, muggy summer, fall has come to Indiana. In addition to bringing cooler temperatures, changing leaves and pumpkin spice flavored absolutely everything, the fall season is a popular one for charitable fundraising. You have probably encountered an advertisement offering to donate a portion of proceeds from sales of small items to charity, or had a cashier ask you if you want to donate to a certain charity at checkout.

This type of fundraising -- commonly called "cause marketing" -- is known as a "commercial co-venture" arrangement in the legal field, and can present invisible pitfalls for the unwary. Read more.
