STEM education: in-school and out-of-school working together

By Lynn Sygiel, editor, Charitable Advisors

Paul Ainslie and Bob Abrams have followed similar career paths. Both have had lengthy careers in the corporate sector - Ainslie at automotive-supplier Delphi and Abrams at engine-maker Cummins and other small businesses.

But that's not all they have in common. Both now work for nonprofit organizations and each is charged with advancing science, technology, engineering and math - or STEM, for short. Abrams is Indiana's Afterschool Network STEM coordinator and Ainslie is the managing director of I-STEM based at Purdue University.

Abrams and Ainslie are working together, helping to marry in-school and out-of-school STEM efforts. Both see limitless opportunities to expand and build upon in-school learning through flexible and engaging out-of-school programming and by connecting programs to community resources.

"The extension is to connect in-school and out-of-school STEM teachers, so that there is consistency. If they're going to do a lesson in physical science in the STEM science class, there may be an after-school program that would align to that," said Ainslie. Read more.

Indiana legislation to watch: After-school funding bill

By Lynn Sygiel, editor, Charitable Advisors

Last year, 11 percent of Indiana young people took part in after-school programming. That is below the national average of 18 percent.

While before- and after-school programs serve nearly 45,000 Indiana children each day, they often operate with limited and patchwork funding from diverse public and private sources.

But that may be changing.

In the 2016 legislative session, Sen. Dennis Kruse, R-Auburn, authored Senate Bill 251, the Out-of-School Learning Fund, to create a fund to give schools grants to pay for programs before and after school and create an advisory board to make recommendations about the fund to the Indiana Department of Education.

The bill was sponsored by Rep. Robert Behning, R-Indianapolis, Rep. Vernon Smith, D-Gary, and Rep. Woody Burton, R-Whiteland. Read more.

Affordable Care Act reporting requirements

By Kelly Eckman, compliance manager, FirstPerson

It seems like employers just finished up year one of reporting to the IRS on Forms 1095-C and 1094-C, but it's already time to look ahead to year two.

While most reporting rules stayed the same, it is important to once again familiarize yourself with the basics on Affordable Care Act (ACA) reporting to ensure your organization is in compliance. This is especially important for organizations that may have grown to over 50 employees in the 2015 calendar year, and are now required to report. Similarly, those organizations with between 50 and 100 employees were not subject to penalties for the 2015 plan year, but will be subject to penalties going forward. That means it's even more important to stay on top of this.

So here is a recap of the basic ACA reporting requirements and the penalties for noncompliance. Read more.
