How a museum captures African-American history

By Kriston Capps, staff writer at CityLab for the Atlantic

One of the most difficult lessons to learn about racism today is one of the first to be gleaned at the Smithsonian Institution's new National Museum of African American History and Culture, which opens to the world on Sept. 24. On the lowest concourse, deep in the museum's basement levels, exhibits about slavery explain that the trans-Atlantic slave trade wasn't motivated by racism.

Racism came after. This isn't new information, but it isn't conventional wisdom in America today. "Enslaved Africans, European indentured servants, and Native Americans worked alongside one another as they cultivated tobacco," reads an exhibit on life in the Chesapeake region. Planters grew fearful of the interracial friendships, marriages, and alliances -- and rebellions -- that characterized life in the colonies. "Africans were ultimately defined as 'enslaved for life,' and the concept of whiteness began to develop."

The design of the museum, from the bottom up, which is the direction in which it's intended to be seen by visitors, reflects that history. Read more.

Magnificent, awful, profound: The stories the new African American museum will tell

By Robert L. Wilkins, U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, for Washington Post

Lewis Fraction never imagined that his death would help inspire work toward a museum on the Mall.

"Brother" Fraction and I were mentors in a church youth program when he died 20 years ago, just shy of his 60th birthday, leaving behind a wife and four grown children. While at his home to comfort his family and remember his life, I was struck by the stories told by the elders gathered there.

Magnificent stories. Awful stories. Profound stories. Read more.

Remembering imprisoned Leesburg stockade girls

By Bradley George, reporter, Georgia Public Broadcasting

Many of the struggles of the Civil Rights era are well known and will be shared at D.C.'s newest museum, the new National Museum of African American History. Others remain hidden, or only known to a few, will also be included in the museum's collection.

In 1963, more than a dozen African American girls, aged 13-15, were held in a stockade for two months. Their crime: demonstrating for integration in Americus, Georgia. A photo taken by a young woman who snuck into the Leesburg Stockade tells one of the untold stories of the 1960s civil rights movement. Read more.

Nonprofits must work overtime on new Rule

By Stephanie Allgeyer, CPA and CFE, VonLehman

Nonprofit organizations that receive government contracts or grants may be hit hard by the overtime rules that go into effect in December. Many of them have agreements that obligate them to provide services at fixed reimbursement rates that won't reflect the higher costs resulting from the new rules. This article addresses those concerns and offers two solutions promoted by the National Council of Nonprofits.

The U.S. Department of Labor's (DOL) long-awaited final overtime rule will have a significant effect on practically every industry and profession in the country.

And the nonprofit sector isn't immune. Managers in the sector actually may be scrambling later in the year to comply with the requirements, which go into effect on Dec. 1. Major changes may be required, particularly as the final rule relates to government grants and contracts.

A recent report by the National Council of Nonprofits (NCN) addresses these concerns and offers solutions government units and funders may have to take. Read more.
