Civic participation begins in schools

By Sylvia Rousseau & Scott Warren, Stanford Social Innovation Review

Yascha Mounk, a Harvard University lecturer and expert on crises of liberal democracy, recently issued a dire warning. "If current trends continue for another 20 or 30 years," he said, "democracy will be toast."

When considering the general state of the current U.S. political system, other prominent political scientists might agree this assessment is not just fantastical conjecture. Generations of young people growing up in the United States have witnessed a sustained institutional disregard for equal rights, freedom of speech, voting rights, and access to decent housing. Young people in this era are particularly disillusioned about a democracy in which Twitter wars at the federal level become an acceptable substitute for dialogue and debate about substantive matters. The logical reaction from young people is to discount democracy as a fundamentally unfair and corrosive system, and an abstract and ineffective concept, rather than a community-centric vibrant set of behaviors and practices. The state of civics education

By Sarah Shapiro and Catherine Brown, Center for American Progress

Civic knowledge and public engagement is at an all-time low. A 2016 survey by the Annenberg Public Policy Center found that only 26 percent of Americans can name all three branches of government, which was a significant decline from previous years.

Not surprisingly, public trust in government is at only 18 percent and voter participation has reached its lowest point since 1996. Without an understanding of the structure of government; rights and responsibilities; and methods of public engagement, civic literacy and voter apathy will continue to plague American democracy. Educators and schools have a unique opportunity and responsibility to ensure that young people become engaged and knowledgeable citizens.

The policy solution that has garnered the most momentum to improve civics in recent years is a standard that requires high school students to pass the U.S. citizenship exam before graduation.

Bill aims to strengthen civics education in Massachusetts

By Steve Leblanc, Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) - Beacon Hill lawmakers are weighing legislation aimed at helping make sure young people in Massachusetts have a better understanding in how the country's political system works and their place in it.

The bill approved last week by the Massachusetts Senate is meant to strengthen the teaching of civics at a time when some on Beacon Hill and beyond worry that the ties that knit the country together are fraying.

They say one way to strengthen those ties is through education.

The bill would require schools to expand on existing requirements that American history and civics education be taught along with instruction in the United States Constitution, the Declaration of Independence and Bill of Rights and the proper etiquette needed to handle the U.S. flag. The human gap: train staff members to spot fraudulent e-mails

By Teddie Linder, business manager, Netlink, Inc.

If your Phishing, spoofing, hacking. These are playful, interesting words that describe something very serious - FRAUD. With e-mail is so commonly used, it has become a favorite way to fraudulently obtain passwords, access to bank accounts or get a computer user to even grant complete access to that machine.

So how do you educate your nonprofit staff to understand what these threats are and identify them?

Some of these your staff is probably familiar with - a long-lost relative in another country who left millions - and all the executor of the estate needs is banking information to send that inheritance to the responder! A prince of a small country is trying to move some of his fortune and escape to America, and if you can help, you will be rewarded! Read more.
