"Eva A-7063" provides educational material

By Lynn Sygiei, editor, Unaritable Advisors

Shakespeare tells us that all the world's a stage where from birth to death everyone plays a part. Eva Mozes Kor could tell us that all the world's a classroom where through history, we learn about good and evil and a lot about ourselves.

When Kor, an 84-year-old Holocaust survivor, tells her story in the new documentary, "Eva A-7063," fittingly, she begins at school in Portz, Romania, the small town where she and her twin sister, Miriam, were born. Theirs was the only Jewish family in town.

The Terre Haute resident said students who had been friends began taunting and calling her a "dirty Jew." Her teachers were of no help, and even made matters worse. On one occasion, Kor said her teacher in the one-room schoolhouse had strewn corn kernels in the corner of the room and forced the 10-year-old sisters to kneel on them. She then allowed the twins' classmates to viciously spew their prejudices against Jews.

Kor's story has been well-documented in Indiana. As her parents and two sisters died in concentration camps at the hands of the Nazis, Kor and her sister were subjected to medical experiments by Josef Mengele, the Nazi "angel of death." Kor's life, and other Holocaust victims, are chronicled at the CANDLES Holocaust Museum & Education Center in Terre Haute.

For decades, Kor harbored intense bitterness. She has since been able to forgive her tormentors and now wants young people to learn from her experiences. Read more.

About the film

By Lynn Sygiel, editor, Charitable Advisors

"Eva A-7063," the 120-minute documentary that premiered last week, is narrated by actor Ed Asner, features appearances by CNN journalist Wolf Blitzer, actor Elliott Gould and former NBA player Ray Allen, who share Kor's influence in their lives. The original score was composed by Dr. Tyron Cooper.

Traveling nearly 90,000 miles, filmmakers Green and Brown followed the 84-year-old Terre Haute resident to the Romanian village where she first encountered anti-Semitism and to the lab at Auschwitz where she was subjected to medical experiments by the Nazi "angel of death," Josef Mengele.

But harder even than those places, Kor said, were the documentarians' probing into the bitter decades in the middle of her life -- before she had come to forgive her Nazi tormentors -- that is a key aspect of the new film, "Eva A-7063."

Green, a former IndyStar journalist whose previous documentary efforts include "Attucks: The School that Opened a City," (2016) about long-segregated Crispus Attucks High School, said Kor's story has typically been told through the lens of her experiences at Auschwitz and her decision to forgive the Nazis.

"Each of those aspects is certainly worth full treatment," Green said. "What's been missing is that middle part, the half century between liberation in 1945 and forgiveness in 1995."

"Our hope is that this new reporting will put into special relief how far this woman has come," Green said.

4 tips for effective candidate vetting

By Amy Wisner, human resources professional, Synergy

Ask a business leader in any industry, in any part of the country, if he or she has trouble hiring talent and you're likely to hear a loud and clear 'yes.'

At a time when recruiting is difficult, it can be tempting for hiring managers to cut corners in an effort to keep their company fully staffed. However, when that entails neglecting proper vetting, such a plan can backfire spectacularly.

Hiring a candidate who is unqualified in any way, or worse, dangerous, means at the very least he or she will be fired and you'll have to start the entire recruiting process over. Employee turnover is not cheap, and losing one employee can cost anywhere from 16 percent to 213 percent of the yearly salary depending on his or her role.

Proper candidate vetting during recruiting must be an essential part of the process for businesses that want the best, most reliable talent.
